kevin: So, Scott, ncba has been fighting against the Waters of the United States rule for several years now. What are the risks this rule could pose to cattlemen and women? scott: There are a lot of risks that the 2015 wotus rule poses to our producers. And the biggest issue is that it's federal overreach at its worst. It claims many more features as federally jurisdictional waters. And that's a problem because it means more federal oversight for our ranchers and feed lot operators. And that means more permits, and it means exposure to activists lawsuits. kevin: The president recently signed an executive order that rolls back the wotus rule. What exactly does his executive order do, and what are the next steps at epa? scott: So, Trump's executive order was a big deal, and it was a great deal for him to do that. So, what it does is it directs the epa and the Army Corps of Engineers, who are the co-implementers of the wotus issue to go back and look at that 2015 rule, and then either rescind it or rewrite it. And then another part of that executive ort tells them to look at late Justic Scalia's opinion on the Supreme Court case in this issue. Which means a replacement rule would be much more narrower than the 2015 wotus rule. So, that's a good thing. kevin: So, as i understand, ncba is also party to a lawsuit challenging wotus. How does the executive order affect that legal challenge, and what's the timetable on that front? scott: The executive order means the beginning of the end for the 2015 wotus rule. And once that rule is officially rescinded, we will no longer need to pursue our lawsuit. So, we'll put that to rest. And then our sole focus will be working with the epa and the Army Corps to make sure they understand the pitfalls and the problems with the 2015 Obama wotus rule, so that when Mr. Pruitt at the epa starts formulating a replacement, he'll be able to produce something at the end of the day that will, number one, work for cattle producers, that number two will protect water quality. And most importantly, follows the rule of law. kevin: Thanks again for joining us, Scott. scott: Thanks for having me. kevin: No doubt federal regulation is often a battle. But what do cattlemen and women believe are some of the biggest challenges facing the cattle industry right now? We asked several folks from around the country to share their top concerns. Here's what they have to say. shane: Well, right now it has to be price. i mean, our break even is -- we might still be making $100 a head, look at the Cattlefax estimation. But that's a pretty slim margin for a high asset, high capitol intensive operation. trey: You know, i think right now as i look at an industry that is struggling with the markets that have been volatile,
